More than ever, today's economy depends on the capacity of our transportation infrastructure. Hudson Institute's recently released book, Mobility: America's Transportation Mess and How to Fix It, explores the threat to economic growth posed by the state of surface transportation financing and management—and offers concrete solutions to improve infrastructure. Mobility is written by Joseph M. Giglio, professor of strategic management at Northeastern University's Graduate School of Business, the noted pioneer in creative financing for transportation needs who chaired President Reagan's National Commission on Public Works Improvement. Mobility analyzes solutions for financing, managing and accelerating the introduction of technology into the nation's surface transportation system. Rather than isolating various transportation modes as silos, Giglio suggests a new, integrated approach, using technology to offer customers greater choices—and solutions

Mobility is written in an accessible style, designed for both the lay person and policy experts—a must-read for anyone trying to move America's transportation forward.
